

Barry Caslin

Barry has worked with national and international colleagues and supports the work of front line agricultural advisors and colleagues within The Teagasc Farm Management and Rural Development Department.

He is an active member of the European Farm Rural Advisory Service (EUFRAS) Barry has organised and ran a number of successful events in both Bioenergy and Rural Development and presented local radio programmes. He has led numerous agricultural stakeholder groups. He has produced numerous publications and developed training courses that meet the needs of Energy and Rural Development, for example the Best Practice Guidelines for Energy Crops and the Rural Tourism Book.

Prior to joining the specialist service Barry worked for eight years in the advisory service with Teagasc and prior to that worked with Glanbia in Germany in the meat industry. He has a first class honours degree in Agricultural Science from UCD and a Masters in Environmental Protection from Sligo IT.